Diana,

I made a few small edits in the attached. There are repetitive sections but I didn't mark or eliminate any. While repetitive I think they still fit where they have been put and are appropriate for the question responses.

I tried but was not very successful at assuring that the summaries at the start correctly reflect the detailed question responses.

Impressive number of recommendations but I think this is better than just text reflecting the discussion .

Ken – I am not sure that we have adequate discussion of the need to have the quality/confidence descriptors in one step carried to the next. Once some data or analyses are considered “of medium or low quality” it should not then lead to a “high confidence in the results of its use. It may be in one of the discussions but I don't have time to relook. Maybe you remember it?. One can have high confidence that a model was applied correctly but low confidence in the result because of limited data and uncertain representativeness.

Look forward to the next version. Will look at it again then.

Andy
